Risky piece of photography in New York: the french photographer Erica Simone made pictures of herself, publically, while being stark naked. In a metro full of strangers she pretends to be a beggar.

To Simone photography has become a passion. The idea that people at that very place in New York were more concerned about their latest purchases than being worried about a homeless person they ran into, intrigued her. She wanted to see what would happen if someone just put off his/her clothes.

The result of her experiences can be seen in an exhibition in New York starting at april 14.
