

One of my favourite is Charles Lutwidge Dodgson, well known as Lewis Carroll, the writer of Alice in Wonderland

Dodgson's main topic was young little girls. He also made many studies of men, women, male children and landscapes. His subjects also include skeletons, dolls, dogs, statues and paintings, and trees. His studies of nude children were long presumed lost, but six have since surfaced, five of which have been published and are available online.

I like his works because he showed the girls as being in Wonderland, and his portraits about men and women are also special.
