What about having a small chat with one of the top photographers from all over the world? Or listen to their stories about how they took particular photographs, what they felt? There is just one-a-year opportunity for this - the World Press Photo Awards Days.

This event takes place in Amsterdam, each year, around begin of May. There are two days of meetings, presentations, lectures and discussions about press photography. Winners of the last year World Press Photo coming up together and presents their work to the audience. And in audience can be anyone, who register through the website: <http://events.worldpressphoto.org/>

The whole event is for free (except travel costs to Amsterdam). I was there last year, and there were two incredible days during which I have learnt a lot about press photography, and especially photographers' work, because it is usually not like it looks on the picture.
